Wow, putting together this Newsletter I realized I posted a lot this month! With so many posts, I finally updated my site to be able to navigate them easier. This month I had my book launch, Talking Tiger is Tough. I am relieved to have my third book done and available for sale. I am now working on book four. I wrote the story, but I am testing out illustrations. I hope next month to make an announcement.

This month was also the first year mark for I Miss You All Day All Week. I have learned so much in the last year. I learned more about writing, illustrating, publishing, and marketing. As a self-publish author, I have to wear a lot of hats. I appreciate everyone who has shown support. Whether it is buying and reviewing my books, sharing them with others, or helping me get through it.

This month also includes more mom-show-and-tell posts. It is a bit hard to keep up with the humorous things these kids do. But, I am having fun with these. I also love doing the colour_collective art. It provided an avenue to improve my illustrations.

This month Bookality Book Reviews featured me on their website and I did my second author visit. My sister invited me to speak to the creative writing class on her campus. That was so much fun. They were great kids.

I also did some Fall and Halloween kid stuff. So, I hope everyone has a safe and fun Halloween. Check back all month long and look forward to more from Stories by Mom.

Below are all our posts since our last newsletter. Please read what you like and share what you love.
